Margaret Roach – A Way to Garden – A 365-Day Garden –
Website: AWayToGarden.com

Margaret Roach, after 15 years at Martha Stewart Living and a decade each at Newsday and The New York Times, now writes the nationally acclaimed blog A Way to Garden and is author of the 2011 corporate-dropout memoir, And I Shall Have Some Peace There, about walking away from “success” for a quieter life lived closer to nature.

Her public-radio show has been named a “top-5 garden podcast” by The Guardian newspaper in the UK, and won 3 silver medals for excellence in 2016, from Garden Writers of America.

Her award-winning book A Way to Garden, in an all-new full-color edition, is coming out spring 2019 from Timber Press. Her previous book, The Backyard Parables (2013) blends garden memoir and how-to advice.

Eat Pray Love author Elizabeth Gilbert said of it: “As a passionate, hopeful and often self-delusional gardener (the only kind of gardener there is!), I loved this gorgeous book. Margaret Roach writes with intelligence, compassion, and most of all – sanity. Her work is a blessing.”

Please note that Margaret Roach will be with us via state-of-the-art live webiner, in a presentation format where she will be presenting “long distance” – and responding to your questions and answers in real time.

Gardening and All That Jazz Creating Your Garden Palette Keynote Speakers

Sue Gaviller – 1) Introduction to Color Theory and
2) Working With Color Theory in the Garden
Website: NotAnotherGardeningBlog.com

Sue Gaviller is a landscape designer, instructor, speaker and writer from Western Canada. Sue caught the gardening bug as a young adult, eventually training to be a landscape designer. She was handed her first client on the last day of class and soon after started her design/consulting company. Later she became an instructor herself, responsible for developing new curriculum including a DynaSCAPE software training program.

She is a sought-after speaker in the city she calls home, delivering her presentations in an informative and entertaining manner. She has lent her expertise to horticultural organizations and Master Gardener associations in both Canada and the US. Her articles have appeared in Canadian magazines like The Gardener and the Prairie Garden as well as smaller local publications. Sue’s popular garden design blog, Not Another Gardening Blog is an information destination for fellow designers, design students and home gardeners – it is recommended reading for horticulture and design students at both college and university levels.

And she does indeed have a garden – now a seasoned gardener of more than 30 years, her passion for designing is equaled only by her enthusiasm for sharing it with others. When not busy teaching, blogging, lecturing or designing for others, she can be found trying to “practice what she preaches” in her own garden.

Dr. Richard L. Bitner – Designing with Conifers: Making the Best Choices for Year-Round Interest in Your Garden
Website: ConifersForGardens.com

Dr. Richard Bitner is a retired anesthesiologist. He studied horticulture at Longwood Gardens in Pennsylvania, where for twenty years he was a Plant Study Walk Instructor and a popular teacher of the Conifers, the Deciduous Flowering Shrubs II, and the Designing With Conifers certificate courses. He teaches a course on conifers at the arboretum school of the Barnes Foundation. His column Gardening Journey appears in Lancaster Magazine. For decades, he served as a member of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society’s Gold Medal Plant Award Committee. His Timber Press titles include: Conifers for Gardens – An Illustrated Encyclopedia; Timber Press Pocket Guide to Conifers, and Designing with Conifers – The Best Choices for Year-round Interest in Your Garden.
